Subject: Clean water protection

Hello Carolyn,

I just read this article <http://thinkprogress.org/climate/2015/02/02/3618295/california-allows-oil-companies-to-pollute-drinking-water-sources/>

The article states that California has until this Friday, February 6th to provide the EPA with a plan. Since the Environment and the Energy Subcommittee is having a hearing this Thursday about clean water protection I wanted to reach out about this issue.

Do you know what EPA will ask California to do in this issue? The state allowed the oil companies to inject this waste into drinking water and that seems highly suspect, I thought there were regulations dealing protecting clean water. Since California is entering into year #4 of its drought it would seem reasonable to ban such contamination especially in such severe conditions.

I am looking to address this type of water contamination in Thursday's hearing and also seeing what steps can be done to stop this type of activity.

Thank you,

Teresa
